where they feel free to be themselves, they often capitalize on their personal experience of having challenged conventional assumptions by engaging with the material in creative ways (Renn, 1998).

Climate communicates expectationed placen students is relevant because people tend to perform in relation to the expectations placed upon them. When students perceive that the instruction thinks they are smart and capable, they meet those expectational expectations effect (Rosenthal & Jacobson, 1992). Conversely, when students perceive that expectations placed on the conform to stereotypes (e.g., Africanican students are less capable), they will underperform, regardless of their actual capabilities tereotypereat effect (Steele & Aronson, 1995).

Climate communicates power dyndmipsoductive classes, instructors use their authority to empower everybody to take ownership in the learning process. Conversely, if some students or group of students feel that their perspective is not represented in the readings, or is belittled when it is they might withdraw from the class. The ultimate form of resistance for people who feel powerless hostile environment is the refusal to learn (Kohl, 1994).

Climatempacts student persistement the cumulative direct and indirect messages students perceive communicate that they are not as able as other students and don't belong in the course, students are less likely to stay in the course, the major, and even in the university (Tinto, 1993).

Strategies to create a productive and inclusive climate

Examine your assumptions very common for instructors to assume that student share their own background, but this is not necessarily so. Do you find yourselfactors as if they all share your religion, sexual orientation, or economicle assertions and their impact on learning

Strive to be fair.
